MR. HUMPHREY'S REMOVAL.

Another most unfortunate feature of the complications at the Deaf-Blind Institute is the removal by the Governor of Mr. J. F. Humphrey [illegible] his position as trustee. It is the more to be regretted because the action taken by the Governor appears to be due to political influence. The charges made against Mr. Humphrey were for the most part of a very trivial nature, which even if fully established could hardly afford sufficient grounds for his removal. The other charge, that he had encouraged teachers to come to him with complaints against the superintendent, was one which was from its very nature extremely difficult of proof. We cannot therefore avoid the conclusion that Mr. Humphrey's removal is owing to the fact that he is a good Republican, that the superintendent who failed of reappointment is a Democrat, and that the Governor is a Populist. The introduction of politics into the conduct of a State institution is deeply to be regretted, and at no time so much as when it involves the removal of an officer of long and distinguished service.

In this connection we would repeat that the Board have placed themselves at a disadvantage by their refusal to make an open statement of their reasons for the appointment of a successor to Mr. Ray. By their persistent silence they have given an opportunity for the circulation of rumors which have afforded an excuse for the partisan action of the Governor. It should not be forgotten that there is no evidence whatever that the members of the Board were not acting entirely in accordance with their views as to the best interests of the Institute in all that they did, and the action which has been most subject to criticism was not that of an individual but of the Board as a whole. But the position of silence taken by the Board is one that is also open to the Governor. He can with equal force claim that his action is due simply to a desire to advance the best interests of the Institute and refuse to give any further reason.

THIS SUMMER'S VISITORS.

The movement now under way to encourage tourist travel to this State during the present summer is one that deserves the interest and co-operation of all. The World's Fair at Chicago is very much in the nature of a rival attraction to Colorado scenery and climate, and while many of those who are accustomed to summer visits to the Rocky Mountain region will not follow their usual custom, many of our own citizens will spend considerable time and money at Chicago. Fortunately, however, the supply of people is not limited, and there is no doubt that an effort rightly directed will turn a large number of visitors in this direction.

There are two ways in which this effort may be employed to a good advantage. The first is in the securing of low railroad rates. The experience of last summer fully demonstrated the fact that there are a large number of people who are ready for a mountain excursion, provided it can be accomplished at a moderate outlay, and the railroads make more money at low rates with crowded trains than with high rates and empty cars. The necessary accompaniment of low rates is proper advertising. Our visitors this year must be recruited more than is customary from those who are strangers to the State and therefore ignorant of its attractions. The first thing to do is to make them want to come, and then to make it possible to do so.

In this connection attention may again be called to the effort to supplement the Colorado display at the Exposition by an exhibit in the State building. The Denver Chamber of Commerce with the approval of the Colorado Board of World's Fair managers has placed this matter in charge of Mr. Irwin Mahon, whose experience in this line is well known, and all public spirited individuals should give a hearty approval and co-operation to the work. An attractive display at the Fair is one of the best ways of attracting summer visitors.

A WESTERN VIEW OF SILVER.

The current number of Harper's Weekly contains an article by Senator Wolcott under the above title which will doubtless attract a good deal of attention, both on account of the sentiments there expressed and the eminence of the author. It is indeed somewhat unusual that one of the leading papers of New York should make a special feature of an article of this kind, but it would be much better if there were a more general disposition on the part of all sections to accord a respectful hearing to those whose views are different from their own. Senator Wolcott's article is a calm and conservative statement of the views of the free silver men. It is free from passion and invective, and can hardly fail to have a considerable influence on the minds of unprejudiced readers.

After denying that the demand for free silver coinage is a sectional or selfish movement Senator Wolcott goes on to say that the far west is practically a unit in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and this without regard to party lines. The overwhelming vote for the Populist party was, he declares, merely a protest against the indifference or hostility of the two great parties on this subject. He declares that nine-tenths of the American people are bimetallists, and that there is hardly a writer on political economy or a student of finance who does not advocate it. The point of difference is whether the United States can safely embark upon the policy of free coinage without European co-operation.

Postponing the consideration of this supreme point Senator Wolcott reiterates the statement that the position of the West is not a selfish one in spite of the immense importance of the silver mining industry to her. He then speaks of the general fall in values due to the appreciation of gold owing to its insufficient and limited supply, a fall which benefits nobody except the annuitants. He condemns the Sherman act as vicious and unsatisfactory, but declares that it has been of great benefit in increasing the currency, and its repeal without a [illegible] would lead to financial embarrassment. At the present time there is not enough gold even for Europe, and the facts do not warrant the statement that if we ceased purchasing silver European confidence would be so restored as to lead to the reinvestment of European capital in American securities.

Continuing Senator Wolcott says:

An international coinage agreement would be of incalculable benefit, but without it the United States, with free coinage at the present ratio, would maintain the parity of [illegible] as it would, go in any event to pay our debts abroad, nor would it reach a premium or be hoarded. There is no stock of silver in the world to be dumped into this country, nor is the production greater than the need of it as coin. France, with fewer resources and a much smaller population, fought the fight for the double standard successfully and maintained the parity of gold and silver for seventy years. The United States can maintain the integrity of the metals with equal success, and until the other civilized nations of the world, tired of depression and suffering brought about by an insufficient supply of gold appreciated far above its normal value, will return to the double standard of both gold and silver, the [illegible] which from decade to decade seems limited by nature to the increasing needs of a growing world.

There must come before many years the resumption of bimetallism in Europe. Its advent would probably be hastened by action by the United States in any one of three ways:

First—By the purchase of gold by the United States. If the United States should [illegible] hundred millions of bonds and with the proceeds should buy gold, the supply needed in Europe being already insufficient, the probable effect would be to compel other nations to reinforce the yellow metal with the white at some ratio. The people of the United States, however, would never tolerate a loan for the purchase of gold, an addition to the interest-bearing debt created for such a purpose, and the political party that attempted it would be repudiated at the polls.

Second—The unconditional repeal of the Sherman act would perhaps force Europe to some adequate measure for the protection of [illegible] billions of silver [illegible] existence as coin. Such action would work incalculable injury [illegible] United States before relief could come. The immediate repeal of all [illegible] every sort would bring about not nearly so great a calamity.

Third—By the inauguration of the free and unlimited coinage of silver by the United States and the coinage of the bullion now in the treasury silver would at once return to its former value of $1.29 per ounce; the amount offered for coinage would [illegible] number of ounces now purchased, and with the resumption of free coinage by the United States and the re-establishment of its value, France would soon again open her mints to silver, and Great Britain, in view of the [illegible] with a measure recognizing silver to some extent, though perhaps a limited one.

The next two paragraphs are devoted to a denial of the statement that the cost of production of silver is less than its coinage value and the article closes with the declaration that free coinage must come either through the old parties or through a new one recruited from the south and west.

Senator Wolcott's article is an excellent one in many ways, but its weakness is in its most essential part. If the statements made in the first few sentences quoted above are true, then his position is unassailable, but unfortunately the opinion of the best judges is not all on one side. Senator Wolcott does not advance any facts to prove these statements. Predictions as to the operation of a law of such consequence as this are entirely uncertain, and the only way to test opinions for or against it is by an experiment of so great consequence that even the greatest minds shrink from its possibilities.

The most admirable thing about the article is that it brushes away a host of minor considerations which have obscured the minds of both the friends and the opponents of free silver, and sets the main question squarely before them. For this if for no other reason it should be read by all. The number of Harper's Weekly containing the article has not reached this city, but it will be found reprinted as a special in the Denver News of Thursday morning.

Attention of the readers of THE GAZETTE has already been called to the exceptional merit of the courses offered at the coming session of the Colorado Summer School. To-day we present a programme somewhat more in detail. There is probably no resident of the city who would not be benefited by attendance at one or more of these courses, and in many of them there are opportunities for study under acknowledged masters which may not occur again in a lifetime. It certainly seems that such a course must attract a large attendance, both from Colorado Springs and from outside points.

Republicans would wish nothing better than the passage by the Democratic Congress of the income tax law. No measure that they are likely to adopt would be so generally or so quickly unpopular.

Why We Should Control the Nicaragua Canal.

In war or in peace the exclusive control of this canal will be to us of inestimable value. For attacking or defending the coasts of our hemisphere, and the islands adjacent thereto, it is more advantageously situated than is Gibraltar for the Mediterranean. As a means of uniting the East and the West, it will be of more value than is the Suez canal for uniting England with India. The latter saves but [illegible] miles, while the Nicaragua canal saves [illegible] in the voyage from the gulf ports to San Francisco.

If we are to continue our policy of protecting the smaller States of the two Americas against the larger ones, and all of them against foreign encroachment, we must control the canal. We must also defend our own country. Our Pacific coast is nearly defenseless. From New York to San Francisco it is 15,000 miles by water—half the circumference of the globe. Between the same points by the canal it is only 5,000 miles. From New Orleans to San Francisco it is [illegible] miles. The canal will cut this down to [illegible] [illegible] England can hurl a fleet against our Western ports by way of the Suez Canal or from Australia, while another fleet, with a base at [illegible] or one of the numerous British strongholds along our Eastern coasts, is threatening the ports on the Atlantic.

Not only in war, but also in competing for the commerce of the world and especially of the western hemisphere, will the nation controlling the Nicaragua canal have an immense advantage. No trade will flourish unless protected by the strong arm of military power, and no better example of this can be cited than that of England. Where all the great nations of the world meet in the canal, and the nations through whose territory it runs are so miserably weak, the inevitable result will be that it will fall into the hands of some great power. If that power be not ourselves, then we may safely bid farewell to military or commercial supremacy in America. The golden moment [illegible]—Harper's Weekly.

A Story of General Butler.

John R. Fisher, who recently returned from a trip to New Orleans, while speaking of General Benjamin F. Butler the other day told the following story: "Butler is still heartily hated there, but the hatred is not so general. I have even heard some native Louisianians speak well of [illegible] there are a number of local anecdotes [illegible] concerning him which have not been [illegible] that show that wit and that he usually got out of his way to do a generous act. Among those who had reason to change their views of Butler was a wealthy creole named Maspereau, a sugar merchant and banker. He did not go into the army, but his sympathies were with the South.

"When Butler took possession Maspereau was greatly exercised about his portable property. He had a great quantity of silverware which had been in the family through several generations. His sisters also were well supplied with this metal. Maspereau was afraid of raiders, and packing up all of his silver, together with that of his sisters, put it on board a vessel to ship it for safety to New York. This came to the ears of Butler. The vessel was not permitted to sail, and Maspereau was sent for. He entered the presence of Butler in fear and trembling. Butler in a stern voice asked why he was sending his plate away, and Maspereau told him for safety that he didn't think it secure in New Orleans.

"'You take that silver to the custom house,' said Butler. 'It shall never be said that property is sent out of New Orleans for safety while General Butler is in command of this place.'

"Maspereau, who told me this, said that he did so, and the silver was taken care of and returned to him when quiet was restored."—Indianapolis News.

The Value of a [illegible]

[illegible] Thanks to the [illegible] of the English metropolis a good story is related of James I and the lord mayor of London. James, as was often the case during his reign, was upon a certain occasion in great need of money, and he applied to the corporation of London for the loan of [illegible] This gentle request the corporation refused, upon which the king, in high dudgeon, sent for the lord mayor and the chief of the aldermen, and having scolded them severely for what he was pleased to term their disloyalty he insisted upon their raising the money for him.

"Please your majesty," said the lord mayor, "we cannot lend you what we have not got."

"You must get it," declared the king.

"We cannot," said the mayor.

"I'll compel you!" cried James, with a stamp of his foot.

"But your majesty cannot compel us to do that which is beyond our power," retorted the mayor boldly.

"No!" exclaimed the king angrily. "Then I'll ruin your city forever. I'll make a desert of Westminster. I'll remove my whole court—law, parliament and all—to York, and then what will become of you?"

"Please your majesty," replied the lord mayor, with a submissive bow, "you will remove your courts and yourself whenever you please, but there is still left one consolation for us poor merchants of London—you cannot take the Thames along with you!"

James did not remove his courts.—New York Ledger.

Danger In Cobwebs.

Cobwebs form an important item in the medical armamentarium of the old-fashioned who are so fond of acting [illegible] as practitioners of the healing art. As an application to wounds, for instance, to check bleeding cobwebs are believed to possess a special virtue. If they possess any virtue at all, it is the virtue of ineffable dust and dirt—hence the modern advice to "beware of cobwebs." Not so long ago three or four cases of lockjaw were reported as following on the application of spiders' webs to wounds. This event is readily explicable. The germ of lockjaw resides in earth and is likely to mingle with the dust which settles on the webs. Hence conveyed into the wound in this way, the germs work their dire effects. But Inspector General Macdonald, M. D., says a microscopic examination of the webs reveals a trap for all sorts of considered and unconsidered trifles in the way of dust and germs. Colonies of bacteria, he tells us, may be detected in the webs, which, like delicate screens or filters, absorb anything and everything which [illegible] the air and settles upon them.—New York Telegram.

Expensive New York Dances.

The most expensive dance ever given in this city was the New Year's ball of 1880 in the Metropolitan Opera House. The floral decorations of the auditorium were on such a scale as actually to give an air of coziness to the great interior. When the executive committee of the ball came to foot up the expenses, they found that $14,859.19 was the actual cost of the "diversion" of a few hours. Only $14,000 had been subscribed by the patrons, and Cornelius Vanderbilt, Hy [illegible] and Ward McAllister made up the deficit. It is justice to Mr. Vanderbilt, Mr. Stevens and Mr. McAllister to say that most of the bills incurred by the ball were paid two days after the dance, and every obligation had been met within two weeks. The New Year's ball the evening of Jan. 13, 1891, though larger than its predecessor, was not as expensive. A trifle over $13,000 covered the expenses of the dance.—New York Cor. Chicago Times.

COLORS OF ANCIENT EGYPT.—The pigments used by the ancient Egyptians 4000 to 6000 years ago were few and almost all represented what have been called primary colors. Red seems to have been most used in the decoration of buildings. Giving results of an investigation of Mr. Flinders Petrie's specimens, Mr. W. J. Russell states that the red pigment was a ferric oxide, an oolitic hematite, with a little clay, the proportion of ferric oxide varying from 40 to 80 per cent. It was a natural pigment, unaffected by sunlight, heat or acids. Another color was a dull yellow, and this also consisted of oxide of iron, combined with alumina, lime and some water, being, in fact, a kind of colored clay. A reproduction of the mixture was fadeless in light, but was changed by heat. An orange color, of which specimens exist that were made about 4000 B. C. by one of the first pyramid builders, was a mixture of the red and yellow. The maker mixed his colors with gum. A very bright yellow contained arsenic and was in fact orpiment, which is now produced artificially. Beaten gold was considerably used in decoration. The earliest blue was the mineral called chrysolite, but in later times a kind of glass or frit colored with oxide of copper was used, and gave various shades. It could be rubbed down in a mortar and was probably applied with gum. The white pigment used was sulphate of lime, known also as gypsum and alabaster. A pale pink color contained 10 per cent. of sulphate of lime, the rest being an organic compound believed to be madder.

VIOLENCE

That is what the ordinary pills and bowel medicines depend upon. That explains why your system is in a worse condition afterward than before. And that is the reason why Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the best things in the world for every stomach and bowel trouble. There's no disturbance, no reaction afterward, and ... absolutely and permanently cure Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, Sick and Bilious Headaches. One tiny, sugar-coated granule is a gentle laxative or regulator; three are cathartic.

They're the smallest, the easiest to take, and the cheapest, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

Buy of reliable dealers. With any others, something else that pays them better will probably be urged as "just as good." Perhaps it is, for them; but it can't be for you.
